Number 8

For most patriotic Christians, which I believe constitutes the vast majority of our country's professing Christians, it is easy to rally around Memorial Day, which I believe is a good thing to do. Almost instinctively we rise to the occasion to profess our commitment to honoring those who have died serving our country during times of war.

One might ask, who will stand up for Labor Day? At this point you might be asking yourself the question, why would anyone? Is there anything in our Christian faith that might propel us to leap into the gaping void of defenders of this day or should it be reduced to just another day off for most salaried workers? Do we hear any religious leader wax eloquently over this question? Are there bumper stickers that advocate for Labor Day? Over all I think we could agree that the answer is a resounding "no" to all these questions.

This being said, ask yourselves, given that the USA only had the world's 16th most powerful military at the end of the 1930's, given the fact that the US was still immersed in the greatest depression in our nation's history, what would have happened to our country had all our young men been raised in prosperity only knowing how to read books and write exams and not knowing the value of physical labor?

The Great Depression and a largely manually based agricultural workforce gave the US military a huge number of very fit, young recruits (including some women) who knew all about hard work, team work and self-sacrifice. Compared to horse farming and the back breaking work he did on the farm in the late 1920's and 1930's my father stated that when he enlisted and went to basic training he had never been fed so well, had such a comfortable place to sleep or worked so little. He and countless others were a part of the Citizens Conservation Corp and were taught how to work together under strict discipline. This military styled leadership helped to shape millions of youngsters into what perhaps had been one of the best volunteer fighting forces in our country's history. The Great Depression, the CCC and the experience with the US military seared the importance of working hard into those who built our country in the 1940's and 1950's, and helped make the US the most powerful country in the world.

This Labor Day weekend, might we give some thought as to how our commitment to doing good work and working hard might do the same for us and our country? Few of us will need to do the back breaking work that our ancestors did. However, might our forebears emphasis on hard work, particularly team work, be one of the greatest gifts we could pass on to our children and grandchildren? When we are faithful in this task, we will not only advance our own (and our families) standing in life, we will also help build our country and beyond. If this is truly our Father's world which the hymn refers to and to which John 3:16 refers, perhaps we as Christians need to pay more attention to the value of looking more closely at what Labor Day might mean to us and to God's world this Sept. 3.

Below I have quoted from Wikipedia on the background of Labor Day:

In 1882, Matthew Maguire, a machinist, first proposed the holiday while serving as secretary of the CLU (Central Labor Union) of New York. Others argue that it was first proposed by Peter J. McGuire of the American Federation of Labor in May 1882, after witnessing the annual labor festival held in Toronto, Canada.

Pattern of celebration

The form for the celebration of Labor Day was outlined in the first proposal of the holiday: A street parade to exhibit to the public "the strength and esprit de corps of the trade and labor organizations", followed by a festival for the workers and their families. This became the pattern for Labor Day celebrations. Speeches by prominent men and women were introduced later, as more emphasis was placed upon the civil significance of the holiday. Still later, by a resolution of the American Federation of Labor convention of 1909, the Sunday preceding Labor Day was adopted as Labor Sunday and dedicated to the spiritual and educational aspects of the labor movement.
